Coverage for All of Your Company Vehicles

Do you or any of your employees operate a vehicle for work purposes? Does your business rely on a fleet of vehicles to perform essential tasks? If so, are you prepared to deal with the financial consequences of an accident?

If you're not sure, maybe it's time to talk to your insurance broker about Commercial Auto Insurance.

These policies provide coverage in the event that you or one of your employees is involved in an accident when driving for work. This coverage also gives your business much needed protection should a vehicle you own, rent, or borrow be involved in an accident.

Commercial auto insurance isn't just for large fleets. Any car, truck, van, or similar vehicle used as part of your operations needs to be covered. And traditional auto policies simply aren't enough, and may even exclude vehicles used for business purposes.

Imagine this:

The owner of a computer repair business is driving to meet a client. On the way, they are rear-ended by an uninsured motorist. Since they were driving for work purposes, their personal auto insurance policy won't reimburse any of the costs related to the accident.

Commercial auto insurance is crucial in these kinds of situations, and can protect businesses from a variety of expenses, including costs related to vehicle damage, medical payments, bodily injuries, and other liability claims.
